2. Gain Relevant Education and Training

While a formal education is not always a requirement in the TV industry, obtaining relevant education and training can give you a competitive edge. Consider pursuing a degree or certificate program in fields such as film production, media studies, journalism, or acting.

Additionally, seek out internships, workshops, and training programs offered by reputable production companies or organizations. These opportunities will not only provide you with practical skills but also valuable networking contacts and industry exposure.

3. Build a Strong Portfolio or Showreel

Having a strong portfolio or showreel is essential when applying for jobs in TV. If you aim to work behind the camera, assemble samples of your work as a producer, director, or screenwriter. Include your best projects or short films that showcase your talent and creativity.

For those aspiring to be on-screen talent, create a showreel highlighting your acting, presenting, or hosting abilities. Demonstrate your versatility and the range of characters or topics you can handle comfortably.

4. Network, Network, Network!

Networking is a vital aspect of breaking into the TV industry. Attend industry events, workshops, and conferences where you can connect with professionals who can provide guidance and valuable opportunities.

Make use of social media platforms like LinkedIn, Twitter, and Instagram to follow industry influencers and engage with them. Join online communities or forums specific to TV professionals, and actively participate in discussions to expand your network.

5. Create a Professional Resume and Cover Letter

Your resume and cover letter are often the first impression you make on employers. Craft a professional and tailored resume that highlights your relevant skills, education, and experiences.

In your cover letter, express your enthusiasm for the TV industry and showcase your knowledge of current industry trends. Emphasize your passion and commitment, and explain how your skills and experiences make you a perfect fit for the role you are applying for.

6. Apply for Entry-Level Positions and Internships

When starting your career in TV, it's essential to be open to entry-level positions and internships. Even if they may not be your dream job, these opportunities provide invaluable experience, exposure, and a chance to learn from seasoned professionals.

Be proactive in searching for job openings and internships through online job boards, industry-specific websites, or contacting production companies directly. Tailor your application materials for each opportunity to showcase your genuine interest and suitability for the role.

7. Prepare for Interviews and Auditions

As you start receiving interview or audition invitations, take the time to prepare thoroughly. Research the company or production you are applying to and familiarize yourself with their portfolio and recent projects.

Practice common interview questions and prepare concise yet impactful responses. For auditions, choose appropriate monologues or scenes that highlight your skills and versatility.

8. Show Your Enthusiasm and Willingness to Learn

During your interviews or auditions, demonstrate your enthusiasm and genuine passion for the TV industry. Highlight any relevant experiences or projects you have worked on independently or collaboratively, and emphasize your willingness to learn and grow in the field.

Show that you are adaptable, open to feedback, and eager to contribute creatively to the productions you will be a part of.

9. Stay Persistent and Focused on Your Goals

Breaking into the TV industry may not happen overnight. It requires persistence, dedication, and a focus on your goals. Keep refining your skills, expanding your network, and seeking new opportunities even if you face setbacks along the way.

Consider reaching out to industry professionals for advice or mentorship and attend industry-related workshops to stay up-to-date with the latest trends and technologies.

10. Continually Evolve and Stay Relevant in the Industry

The TV industry is constantly evolving, with new formats, platforms, and technologies emerging regularly. To stay relevant and grow in your career, continue to evolve your skills, adapt to industry changes, and embrace new opportunities.

Follow industry news, watch a diverse range of television shows across various genres, and engage with creative communities online to stay informed and inspired.

Securing your first job in TV may seem challenging, but with the right strategies and perseverance, it is entirely achievable. Take advantage of education and training opportunities, build a strong portfolio, network extensively, and showcase your passion and commitment to the industry.

“When I arrived in Los Angeles, I’d been warned to stay away from boomerangs or at least to fear getting sucked down and jaded with them. You know, the people who move here thinking they will become the next Oscar winner in 6 months only to end up working at Starbucks and bitter. Now, before you get your panties or boxers in a bunch, please know, I am a big fan of Starbucks, their Marshmallow Dream Bars and their full employee health benefits even for part- timers. What I’m referring to is the IDEA of working as a Barista thinking one day Ava DuVernay is going to walk in, ask to read your script, take your headshot or watch your reel then escort you to the red carpet. By the time you realize that’s not happening, it’s been 5 years (or longer) and you’ve convinced yourself you have no talent and are now mad at everyone else just for breathing. So, you pack your bags and go back home. Human boomerangs.” In this first edition of the Step By Step How to Get Your 1st Job series, author Gigi M.
