Jenna climbed in, checking out the backseat, prepared for the worse. It took a lot for Justin to turn green like he did. What would she see? Fingers? A severed head?

She almost laughed when she did finally find it. Her poor partner, squeamish over something like this? She took a pen off the dash and carefully fished the object off the floor, holding it out a little as she stepped back.

"This is getting to you?" The object, a used condom, hung limply from around the pen's barrel. "Wow, I can understand why. It looks like it's an extra large." She laid it back down where she found it. "But I don't think our killer left that. Looking at that crime scene, he's too bold to hide behind a raincoat."

"Yeah, well, we need to have this towed in." He motioned for one of the uniforms to do that and took another step back from the car.

"I guess we should get these prints run and then see if Stephanie lived with her parents. She's just 18, she should have someone, a guardian, someone." She handed the wallet back to Justin and started to turn.

"Jenna?"

She looked back, seeing him standing there, a flashlight in his hand pointed down at the driver's license. "Yeah?"

"Does she look familiar to you?"
