As four-year-old Annie travels from Alexandria, Virginia, to Portland, Oregon, away from almost everything dear to her, she clings to the one person she still has left, her mother. Her mother's cross-country move to escape racism and domestic violence turns out to be a perilous new beginning for Annie, an innocent child who secretly encounters someone worse than the Boogeyman.

"Who's watchin' me?" is Annie's confused question for while she is regularly left in the care of a trusted adult, Annie often ends up in the hands of someone quite different and Annie is left to discover that bad things happen to her when people aren't watching and that, sometimes, even grownups might hurt her.

Please be advised, THIS IS NOT A CHILDREN'S BOOK, and contains real, raw and explicit content related to the sexual abuse and trauma of a child. Hence, this book is for mature readers only.

Angela Braxton-Johnson, weaves a compellingly true and heart wrenching story with a unique voice laced with the warmth, humor and curiosity of a child. In a day and age when people are sharing their traumatic past experiences, Annie helps us understand what it's like to experience sexual and physical abuse from a child's point of view in this creative, brave and transparent work of heart.
